Saudi Arabia's Water Sector

13th January 2021 | 01.00 to 2.30 pm

Several different factors – such as population growth and the modernisation of existing infrastructure – have made Saudi Arabia's water sector one of the most interesting in the region. Considerable efforts by the authorities to increase investments and enhance the quality and quantity of water supply have shaped an image of a kingdom aware of challenges related to the availability of water and tackling them actively.

Water desalination, urban and rural distribution, effective water management and wastewater reuse and treatment are among the key components to the Saudi plans. For German companies, those are fields of great interest and importance. Saudi Arabia has reiterated that it would be particularly delighted to include German companies in realising its efforts.
